National Standard for Education Business Partnership Organisations

Foreword by Jim Knight,
Minister for Schools and Learners

Work-related learning has a clear positive impact on young people's journey to a successful adulthood and their future economic wellbeing. It helps them connect their learning with the world of work and so prepares them to make a positive contribution to society and the economy and to have lives full of opportunity, free from the effects of poverty. The contribution of employers is vital to making work-related learning happen - more so with our ambitious programme of reforms including the new Diplomas. It is therefore essential that we make it as easy as possible for employers to play their part. This new standard is intended to ensure that work-related learning is supported by a high quality network of Education Business Partnership Organisations each working to standard that employers, schools and colleges have every right to expect and demand.

Foreword by Anne Tipple, National Skills Development Executive, British Chambers of Commerce

The British Chambers of Commerce fully support the network of Education Business Partnerships Organisations (EBPOs) that help make it easier for businesses to work in partnership with schools and colleges. The British Chambers of Commerce recognise just how vital it is to individual businesses and to the economy as a whole that young people come out of education with the skills they need to succeed. Business is hugely supportive of education and has a very strong track record of working in partnership with schools and colleges, in return they, and schools and colleges, need to have confidence in the service they receive from the EBPOs they work with - just as any customer would expect from business. We therefore welcome the opportunity to lend our support for this new standard and to continuing to work with the Department for Children, Schools and Families and its other partners to make them a success.

Introduction and Rationale

We define Education Business Partnership Organisations (EBPOs) as any organisation that exists, wholly or in part, to enable employers to work in partnership with education as a contribution to young people's education and their journey to a successful adulthood.

The activities EBPOs help enable fall within the definition of work-related learning:

Planned activity that uses the context of work to develop knowledge, skills and understanding useful in work, including learning through the experience of work, learning about work and working practices, and learning skills for work.

Work-related learning has been a statutory part of the curriculum since 2004, and is an essential component of Diplomas. It features in all areas of the curriculum and, in the education of all groups of learners from age 5 to 19. It encompasses a wide range of activities that are set out in the framework published by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority titled 'Economic Wellbeing: Career, Work-related Learning and Enterprise'

There is strong evidence that work-related learning improves results for young people. It has been shown to improve attitudes, behaviour, participation and results. It includes work experience and helps young people connect their learning with the world of work including helping them develop employability skills. It includes enterprise education to help young people to be creative and innovative, to take and manage risks, and to do so with determination and drive; and it encompasses careers education to help learners make informed choices about their future careers and aspirations.

The impact that work-related learning has on outcomes for young people means that it is essential to have a strong supply of committed and active employers working in partnership with schools and colleges. It is those employers that provide the supply of work experience placements, projects, and other resources and inputs needed to deliver Diplomas and other qualifications. They support enterprise activities and work with schools and colleges to deliver careers education.

The supply of employers, the depth of their relationship with schools and colleges, and the quality of their experience is dependent to a significant extent on the EBPOs that support employers, schools and colleges. The quality of EBPOs is therefore vitally important and is the rationale for the production of the national standard for EBPOs.

Content of the Standard

The standard is intended to be stretching but at the same time realistic so that all types of EBPO can apply it, including new entrants to the market. It is divided into two sections. A 'Core' containing elements that apply to all EBPOs whatever the shape or purpose of their organisation; and a set of modules to be applied on the basis of the type and range of the organisation's activities.

Application of the Standards

We expect all EBPOs that draw on public funding to meet the standard or, for those new to the market, to be working toward it. That means that each element that is in the core and the relevant element or elements in the modules should be met.

We have not been prescriptive about how EBPOs should go about evidencing the extent to which they meet the standard. Evidence can be gathered and presented in any way which users find helpful.

Self assessment

We expect EBPOs to carry out regular self assessment against the standard. Self assessment has been shown to be highly effective in many areas, for example in schools, in terms of its impact on quality and performance. It is low cost, flexible and only as bureaucratic as the organisation itself chooses to make it. It enables evidence to be gathered for external assessments and to demonstrate the organisation's capabilities more generally. Any deficiencies can be identified and addressed at an early stage.

External validation

We also expect external validation to take place at least every three years by suitably experienced and competent individuals. DCSF has put in place arrangements for this process to happen through the National Education Business Partnership Network.

Procurement and Contract Management

We expect organisations to have due regard to the standard when using public money to procure and manage the services of the EBPOs they use to meet the needs of employers and learners in their area. In other words organisations will use the standard as one of the criteria against which they will judge the quality of bids during open and competitive tenders. We would expect them to refer to the standard over time during service delivery including where they deliver those services in-house.

Reaching the Standard

To reach the standard EBPOs should be able to demonstrate good evidence, or better, against all the elements with the core and against the elements in the modules that are relevant to them. Common sense together with sound business sense should be applied to defining what constitutes 'good'. There will be merit in users comparing themselves against other organisations in this respect and/or to other types of quality mark, award or process.

Reviewing the Standard

DCSF will review the standard over time and welcomes any feedback or suggestions for their improvement or revision.
